LIST OF AGRICULTURAL COLLEGES.

WASHINGTON:
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.
1876.

PREFACE.

The Department of Agriculture views with favor the organization of agricultural societies throughout the land, and issues this list to present to the public a fair record of the condition of such associations, to encourage all who are especially interested in rural pursuits to form such societies, or join those already in existence; to the end that the knowledge they have severally gained by experience and observation may be exchanged, and a love for the grand profession of agriculture be developed and fostered.

The necessity for these societies is becoming more and more apparent, as, in order to make agriculture profitable, farmers must infuse a high degree of intelligence into their business, systematize their labor, and devote their energies to increase the productive capacity of the soil, and thereby secure a fair return for the capital invested and labor bestowed, enabling them to adopt those rules and regulations of business-life which yield such satisfactory results in commercial and manufacturing pursuits.

The list contains the names and address of the officers of the various societies, enabling those persons interested in agriculture to open correspondence with farmers in every part of our country, it also places the farmers in agreeable and valuable relations with each other, by which they may aid one another in their calling, and thus benefit the cause of agriculture generally. It also gives the year of the organization of each society; whereby we can trace the growth of this principle of association; the earliest societies on the books of the Department being The Society for the Promotion of Agriculture, established in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1785; the Massachusetts Society for Promoting Agriculture, Boston, Mass., in 1792, and the Agricultural Society of South Carolina, Charleston, S. C., in 1795. Dividing the American century into four parts, the number of societies now in existence were organized as follows: From 1776 to 1801, inclusive, 3; from 1802 to 1826, 16; from 1827 to 1851, 375; and from 1852 to 1876, over 1,500.

The number of members of each society is given, from the few of the select clubs having some special branch of agriculture in charge, to the hundreds of the county societies, including in their membership all who may pay a yearly sum during the autumnal fair.

The list gives the returns from inquiries concerning libraries and the number of volumes they contain, if annual fairs are held, and whether correspondence is established between the societies in the counties and the State agricultural societies.

The large number of libraries reported by the societies is an indication of a wholesome sentiment pervading their membership, and is a step in the right direction; and it will be a happy day when the farmers make ample provision, in this respect, for the intelligent and earnest members of their families, when books shall be the companions of their households, and their homes by means of culture and enlightenment, shall realize the ideal of domestic bliss. Then shall the isolation which now weighs with peculiar heaviness upon their wives and children be removed; then shall the pleasures and allurements of the homestead rival those of the city, and the young remain at home to stimulate each other by studies and experiments in the interest of their calling, thus increasing their knowledge and enabling them to become useful members of society.

Fairs are also a commendable way of increasing public interest in rural affairs, and an important element in the education of the people, being a good school for object-teaching, by exhibiting what can and has been done on the farm by farmers and members of their families. Their value is also becoming better understood by adding a more intellectual observance of the occasion, in having addresses delivered and essays prepared by persons of experience read, in which the practical and domestic duties of the farm are publicly and wisely considered.

Agricultural societies have been chartered by the legislatures of a number of States, and this Department indorses most emphatically these State organizations; they form a nucleus around which the agricultural interests of the State can gather, and by means of the various associations in their counties can more readily develop the resources of the commonwealth and confer the blessings of plenty upon its citizens.

Holding the soil in trust, not merely for ourselves, but for those who come after us, we fail in our duty if we neglect its thorough cultivation; it is, therefore, eminently proper that we obtain all the aid possible from association and co-operation, in order to secure a careful return of the various methods of farming, and learn the many ways by which thrifty and intelligent farmers succeed; and these results, with many others of a kindred character, are published for the common benefit by this Department in its annual and monthly reports.

The Department avails itself of these societies to distribute the seeds issued under the law creating it. The amount of seed for such distribution is limited by congressional appropriation; hence much care and discretion are required and exercised in its distribution; and the result so far has been that the Department has no cause to complain of any lack of attention on the part of the societies, many of them making intelligent and, in some cases, comprehensive reports of the results of the planting of the seeds thus distributed. The Department reserves to itself the right to withdraw such appropriation of seeds on account of any special neglect to report as required by the law.

The annual and monthly reports of the Department are also sent to these societies for their libraries and circulation among their members, but the number issued is likewise limited by the appropriation of Congress; hence, where there are more than two societies in a county, a selection is made of the societies to receive the seeds and documents, so that each part of the country shall be reached.

The alphabetical arrangement of the list is by counties, and is complete as far as it has been possible to make it so. A list of agricultural colleges is likewise given. The Department respectfully asks to be informed of any changes that may occur in the officers, and also of any errors or omissions that may appear.

FREDERICK WATTS,
Commissioner of Agriculture.
